We have investigated the optimum concentration of 5-aminolevulinic acid (ALA) for hematoporphyrin production in a rat tumor model by continuous administration of ALA into the small intestine. While a single oral administration of 930 mg/kg of ALA produced 8.2 mg/g of hematoporphyrin at 2 hours after administration in the solid tumor-bearing rat, continuous administration of 10-20 mg/kg of ALA for 6 hours produced 10-50 times as much hematoporphyrin as this dose. When the maximum tolerated dose (MTD) of ALA was examined in the tumor-bearing animal, a dose of 590 mg/kg of ALA was found to be the MTD, showing that 1/4 of the MTD is the optimum concentration of ALA for hematoporphyrin production. There was no significant difference in the efficacy and dosage-response of hematoporphyrin production between the solid tumor and the ascites tumor. In the solid tumor, the activity of ALA on hematoporphyrin production was dependent on the volume of the tumor, suggesting that the expression level of the delta-aminolevulinic acid dehydratase (delta-ALAD) activity in the tumor might be one of the factors determining the optimum concentration of ALA for hematoporphyrin production.An evaluation of the antifungal activity of
