I'm new to socket programming. I'm currently trying to build a simple multi-player game. The question is: How do I send custom message to every connected client so that they can hear it? (Assuming they're connected.) I know I have to send it using the socket.send(), socket.sendMessage() and socket.close() function but what exactly do I have to write in order to achieve this? A: socket.send(data) socket.send(data, 0) socket.send(data, data_len) (see socket.send for full details) Q: GDB does not show correct address, when using gdb with arm In the last days I got a strange behavior from gdb. I have a source code of a binary compiled for a u-boot (arm926ejs) of Freescale IMX 656. And now I'm debugging it, when it is running. gdb supports me pretty fine, until I enter a (root)shell. Now I want to enter the shell, the gdb shows me the first instruction and everything fine. But, as soon as I call another command it all goes horribly wrong. The only thing I can do is to quit the shell by pressing ctrl+c. Somebody has an idea where the problem could be? I found already quite a lot of similar problems, but none of the solutions, that I've tried, solved my problem. GDB debugging a running binary on ARM Be
