Did this make sense?Home Unnatural History is a made-for-television film about a racist, globe-trotting gangster who is developing a new drug. It stars Edward Fox, Robert Patrick, Richard Long, and a performance-capture Gollum. The film also stars Kevin Tighe as a boffin conducting a scientific study of the criminal, and Jack Warden as a sinister man sent by the gangster to eliminate him. The film is a parody of crime films, and has been described as (outrageously!) a pastiche of contract killers, con men, and Nazis. In an interview for the DVD extra "After Credits", Eugene Levy (who plays Mervo, the gangster's right-hand man) said, "It's one of the few films to ever make fun of what we did, because we were constantly like this. They would come in the studio, our contract killers would come in, and we had to film them all in one take, and we'd go 'action!' and they'd be killed." This was also the last appearance in British Cinema of Richard Long, who had played the President of Romania in The Spy Who Loved Me. This is a partial list of tunes frequently played in the film: Themes As in most parody movies, the naturalism of the characters and situations is often exaggerated. The gangsters' lifestyle, for example, is ostentatiously opulent, with boardroom meetings in "Versailles", and endless hours of drinking, playing cards, and watching movies. (The production team turned the "Boardroom" into a recording studio.) However, the real-life gangsters were often pathetic and/or sadistic. The Rolling Stones were asked by the producers to donate their legendary "I Can't Get No Satisfaction" for the soundtrack, and the Stones were to be paid for the song. Keith Richards, however, told them he was "not prepared to exploit the memory of a gangster". Despite the fact that the Stones' name was now
